MIAMI — The deluge let up just as the festivities began.

Two hours later, Archbishop Thomas Wenski emerged from St. Mary Cathedral into bright sunlight, having officially been installed as Miami's fourth archbishop.

On a rain-soaked June 1, the first day of the hurricane season, as the archbishop himself noted, this descendant of Polish immigrants — a man born during a hurricane — became the first native son to take the staff as chief shepherd of south Florida's 1.3 million Catholics.

"Hopefully, this is not a prophecy," Archbishop Wenski joked as the rains fell earlier in the day during a brunch for bishops, friends and family members that preceded the installation Mass.

The downpours reminded Father John McLaughlin, a retired archdiocesan priest, of the days of the late Archbishop Edward McCarthy, whose tenure as Miami's second archbishop seemed always to be "blessed," as he put it, by rain.

It was obvious, however, as Archbishop Wenski stepped onto the drenched red carpet leading up to the cathedral doors, that he will add his own inimitable touch to his tenure here: He will not mince words and he will have plenty to say.

An outspoken advocate of immigrants and human rights since his days as a priest among Miami's Haitian community, the new archbishop paused for impromptu news conferences both before making his way into the cathedral and afterward.

He preached his homily in fluent English, Spanish and Creole — the three languages he learned while growing up in Lake Worth, attending the seminary in Miami and working as a priest in Little Haiti.

He urged south Florida's Catholics to "involve themselves in the public square and do so coherently and unapologetically."

He told them that "the sins" that weaken the Church from inside can only be healed by conversion, by focusing on "no other treasure but that: the gift of encounter with Jesus Christ."

He summarized the Church's social justice teachings in five words: "No man is a problem," adding, "When we see another human being as a problem, we often give ourselves permission to look for expedient but not just solutions."

He also told Miami's Catholics, buffeted in recent months by financial woes that forced the merging of parishes, the closings of schools and the shuttering of ministries, not to "feel sorry for ourselves. Our brothers and sisters in Haiti, Cuba and elsewhere have challenges much more daunting than our own — with far less resources than we have."

"We begin a new chapter in the history of this local Church," Archbishop Wenski concluded, "and so, this is the time for us all — priests, deacons, religious and members of Christ's faithful — to assess our fervor and to find fresh enthusiasm for the spiritual and pastoral responsibilities that lie ahead of us. ... Let us start afresh from Christ."

TIMELINE OF AN INSTALLATION:

A Knock ... A Bull ... & A Chair

Three priests to be honored

Three priests who have worked in the archdiocese for decades are being honored by their respective communities this month.

Franciscan Father William F. Collins, founder of the Poverello Center in Wilton Manors, is marking the golden jubilee of his priesthood this year. He will be honored at a dinner Saturday, June 26, 6 p.m., at the Fort Lauderdale-Broward County Convention Center, 1950 Eisenhower Blvd., Fort Lauderdale.

Father Collins began the Poverello Center about 23 years ago. While serving as chaplain at Imperial Point Medical Center, he found himself ministering to people with HIV/AIDS who had been abandoned by their families and friends and were in desperate need of food and shelter.

First using his own money, Father Collins tried to provide for the needs of those he met. When that wasn’t enough, he began begging for help from other churches, synagogues and grocery stores. Finally, he and a group of supporters established a nonprofit corporation, the Poverello Thrift Store and Food Bank in Pompano Beach.

Today, the Poverello Center operates a food bank and thrift shop out of a storefront facility at 2292 Wilton Drive, Wilton Manors. As of 2010, they have served over 12,000 clients. Last year, they distributed enough food to provide more than 1 million meals to people living below the federal poverty guidelines.

Tickets for the celebration may be purchased online at www.poverello.org or by calling 954-561-3663.

Father Joseph “Pepito” Garcia, currently retired but serving at St. Kevin Parish in Miami, will be honored at a luncheon June 26, 2 p.m., at Signature Gardens, 1272 S.W. 122 Ave., Miami. He also will have a street named in his honor: Bird Road from 117 to 127 Avenues will be known as “Padre Jose Pepito Way.”

Father Garcia is marking 58 years of priesthood, nearly 28 of those in the archdiocese. Ordained in 1952, he arrived in south Florida in 1981 and began working at St. Timothy Parish in Miami. He has been at St. Kevin since 1987, and retired in June 2009.

Tickets to the luncheon are $33 per person and may be obtained by e-mailing frjrg57@gmail.com or jmdorado1@aol.com.

The community of St. Mark, 5601 S. Flamingo Road, Southwest Ranches, hosted a retirement Mass for Father Mannix Stack on Sunday, June 6. Born in Ireland, Father Stack will turn 90 this August. He has spent 72 years in religious life: 35 years as a brother and 37 as a priest. He joined the Presentation Brothers in 1939 and taught in Ireland, Grenada, Barbados and St. Lucia until 1970, when he entered the seminary.

He was ordained for the Diocese of St. Lucia, West Indies, in 1973 and came to the archdiocese in 1978, where his brother, Father Christopher Stack, was pastor at Sacred Heart in Lake Worth. Father Stack served there as well as at St. Luke in Lake Worth; Holy Family in North Miami; St. John Neumann in Miami; Nativity in Hollywood; St. Ambrose in Deerfield Beach; Our Lady of the Lakes in Miami Lakes; and finally St. Mark, since 1997.

Archdiocese website wins award

The Archdiocese of Miami’s website, www.miamarch.org, which has undergone updates and redesign over the past year, was recently awarded the 2010 Communicator Award of Distinction. The website was honored in the category of “Religion and Spirituality.” More than 7,000 entries were received overall, making it the largest and most prestigious award of its kind. The website is maintained by the archdiocese’s Communications Department in conjunction with the designers and programmers at Atimo.us.

Enrollment open at Brother Rice Academy

Archbishop Curley Notre Dame High School is easily accessible via the Julia Tuttle Causeway and I-95, providing the perfect drop-off point for parents working within Miami’s core, the beaches, and surrounding areas.

Photos of the installation Mass for Archbishop Thomas Wenski, including the after-Mass reception line, are now posted at DotPhoto.com. Students both individually and in small groups are encouraged to explore subjects in greater depth and seek unique applications of what they are learning.

The curriculum features: an extended school day in which students are encouraged to develop skills in at least one other world language, to learn a musical instrument and to participate in community service projects; individualized programing and small-group engagement; advanced-level courses in mathematics, science and languages; the full resources of the high school campus and activities, including music, art studio, speech and debate, journalism, cross-country, soccer, football, basketball, wrestling, volleyball, baseball, softball, tennis, and track and field.

Archbishop Curley Notre Dame High School is maintained by the archdiocese’s Communications Office, 305-762-1045.
Thank you for that enthusiastic welcome you gave me at the beginning of Mass. Gracias, Mesi amply. Also, I am grateful for the support of those who traveled great distances to be here today — His Eminence, Cardinal O'Malley, my brother bishops, my relatives, and, of course, the priests who came down from Orlando to make sure that I was well received. Your presence means so much to me personally, and to all the faithful of the Archdiocese — for this is a significant event not only in my own life but in the life of this local Church, Your Most Efficacious Vicar. I’m certain that God has placed me in entrusting to me the care of this Archdiocese — in spite of my own limitations and shortcomings. Of course, if you are so kind to, perhaps, Archbishop Barney Auzua, Papal Nuncio to Haiti, who is also present here today, could carry that same message for me.

Sometimes I tell people — only half in jest — the best thing about Miami and South Florida is that it is so close to the United States. Miami is certainly, to be sure, part of the United States, this great land of opportunity and freedom. And Miami can rightfully claim to be our nation’s new Ellis Island — for it has become a port of entry for refugees and immigrants from around the world, but especially from the Caribbean, particularly from the South American nations. Of course, there was no Statue of Liberty here to welcome the newcomers — and sometimes those newcomers were not very welcomed anyway; but for the past 52 years under the leadership of my predecessor, Archbishop Coleman Carroll, Edward McCarthy and John C. Favalora, the Church of Miami was here to extend her maternal embrace to all. For the Church is the Father’s House — and all God’s children should feel at home in their Father’s House, and here in the Archdiocese of Miami — in our parishes, schools and charitable institutions — we have welcomed newcomers — from the first refugees fleeing the Cuban Revolution to this year’s victims of the earthquake.

Quiero agradecer la presencia solidaria de tantos obispos que han venido a participar en esta ceremonia. De los obispos cubanos a quienes tanto admiro, he aprendido lo que quiere decir esta frase: “no es fácil”, ¡y, qué testimonio de fe, esperanza y caridad nos han dado! Pues, a pesar que no es nada fácil, han permanecido fieles a la misión confiada a ellos por Cristo para llevar a los pobres de la Buena Nueva, para anunciar la liberación a los cautivos y la curación a los ciegos, para dar libertad a los oprimidos y proclamar el año de gracia del Señor (Lucas 4:16-21). Se nos acerca el aniversario del hallazgo y la presencia de la imagen de la Virgen de la Caridad en Cuba: 400 años en el año 2012. Que este jubileo de la Virgen Mambisa una al pueblo cubano que, a pesar de tristes divisiones y agravios, sigue siendo un solo pueblo.

As the obispos cubanos han dicho: A Jesús por María, la caridad nos une. Así es fin, hagamos nuestro el Grito de Guerra de Ignacio Agramonte: “Que la Virgen de la Caridad nos ilumine”. Que ella nos ilumine con esa luz brillante como la estrella solitaria de la bandera cubana — que es la luz de Cristo, el único Salvador del mundo.

Workaholic, childlike, bighearted
That’s how those who have worked with Archbishop Thomas Wenski describe him

ANA RODRIGUEZ-SOTO
Florida Catholic staff

MIAI — Cristina Caban puts it plainly: “He’s a workaholic.” She should know. For the past three years she has been Archbishop Thomas Wenski’s secretary in Orlando — scheduling his appointments, answering his phone, typing his letters and trying to get copies of the ones he types himself.

“He answers all his mail, all of it,” Caban said, even those she would argue deserve no response.

“Because everyone who takes the time to write deserves an answer,” is Archbishop Wenski’s reply to her objections.

Her official work hours, she said, are 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., but that’s only on paper. As she put in the farewell card that she wrote to him, “I’m overworked, I’m underpaid and I still enjoy it. There’s something wrong with this picture.”

Still, “he works harder than all of us who work around him,” Caban said.

“His sense of humor is what a lot of people don’t know,” she added. “He is the best boss I have had, ever.”

Those who knew Archbishop Wenski when he was a priest also remember him fondly.

“It’s because we took such good care of him since he was little,” joked Claretian Sister Carmen Alvarez, who first met Miami’s new archbishop when he was assigned as a deacon to St. Benedict Parish in Hialeah.

She remembers how he “invented” a religious education program that had catechists going out to teach in people’s homes and in the Cambridge Square apartment complex. Eventually, the program taught more children than were enrolled in the parish-based classes.

“I knew that with the vision he has and his personality, he would become something,” said Sister Alvarez, who later worked with Archbishop Wenski again when he was assigned as a newly ordained priest to Corpus Christi Parish in Miami.

“Since he was a seminarian he earned the admiration and love of all the people who worked for him,” she added. “I admire him very much because he is a very capable man, a hardworker and someone whose heart is like that of a child.”

Sister Yamile Saieh, a member of the Salesian Sisters of St. John Bosco who worked with then-Father Wenski at Notre Dame d’Haiti in Miami, said, “I still can’t believe” he has returned as archbishop.

Her wish for him, she said, is that “he remain the same (person) he has always been, with that great heart he has that can encompass the whole world.”

‘What you see is what you get’
many. But let’s not feel sorry for ourselves. Our brothers and sisters in Haiti, Cuba and elsewhere have challenges much more daunting than our own — with far less resources than we have. We can be tempted, like Martha in the Gospel, to be worried about many things — but let us not forget the one thing necessary: our relationship with Jesus Christ.

With the light of the Risen Christ and with the power of the Holy Spirit we must continue to announce the good news of Jesus Christ and invite all to an encounter with him in the Church so that they might have life in him. We have no other treasure but that: the gift of encounter with Jesus Christ. As the bishops of Latin America said at the Fifth Conference of CELAM in 2008: “We have no other happiness, no other priority but being instruments of the Spirit of God, in the Church, so that Jesus Christ may be known, followed, loved, adored, and communicated to all, despite difficulties and resistances.”

Some of those difficulties and resistances are found within us — sometimes faith is found weakened, hope uncertain and charity grown cold. Pope Benedict remarked last month commenting on the scandal of clerical sex abuse of children and young people: “The greatest persecution of the Church does not come from the enemies outside, but is born from inside the Church.”

This “suffering of the Church that comes from the sins that exist from inside the Church” will not be solved by better computer programs, more efficient business practices, or even by better preaching — what is required, rather, is conversion, a recommitment on the part of all to live the faith coherently.

But there are other difficulties and resistances found outside as well as inside the Church. The increasing sway within our culture of what Pope Benedict has called the “dictatorship of relativism” is a growing challenge to the Church’s mission to bring the Gospel to all. This radically secular world view wishes to reduce faith to the realm of the “private” and the “subjective” and thus tries to limit our freedom to serve, whether in health care, education or social services. It tries to exclude our voice, the voice of the Church, in the public square. To a world tempted to live as if God doesn’t matter and therefore a world that teeters on the brink of despair, we need to witness to hope by showing — by what we say and do (and by what we won’t do) — how beautiful, how joyful life is when one lives convinced that God does indeed matter.

And, because God matters, we are also called to model a life in which man matters as well. For this reason, Catholics should involve themselves in the public square — and do so coherently and unapologetically. This is not to “impose our views” but to “make our proposal” about what is necessary for human flourishing in society. Thus, we bring to public policy debates on issues of human life, dignity, justice and peace, immigration reform, and marriage and the family an understanding of the human person that, while founded on the Christian Scriptures, is also accessible to human reason.

While this understanding expressed in the Church’s social teachings can seem to be quite complex, I believe it can be summarized in one simple phrase: No man is a problem. This is why as Archbishop of Miami I will continue to proclaim in one simple phrase: No man is a problem. This is why as Archbishop of Miami I will continue to proclaim — to assess our fervor and to find the good news of Jesus Christ and resistances found outside as well as inside the Church.

For us, Catholics, therefore, there can be no such thing as a “problem pregnancy” — only a child who is to be welcome in life and protected by law. The refugee, the immigrant — even one without “papers” — is not a problem. He may perhaps be a stranger but a stranger to be embraced as a brother. Even criminals — for all the horror of their crimes — do not lose their God-given dignity as human beings. They too must be treated with respect, even in their punishment. This is why Catholic social teaching condemns torture and advocates for the abolition of the death penalty.

As I begin my service to this local Church as its fourth Archbishop, I ask for your support, your cooperation — and, most of all, I ask for your prayers. We begin a new chapter in this history of this local Church — and so, this is the time for us all — priests, deacons, religious and members of Christ’s faithful — to assess our fervor and to find fresh enthusiasm for the spiritual and pastoral responsibilities that lie ahead of us. We must look ahead and, like Peter, trusting in Christ’s words, “put out into the deep.” Dux in altum. The Lord has already assured us: “I am with you always.” So let us begin. Let us start afresh from Christ (“Novo Milenio In eunt”).

A serenade for new archbishop

Members of neocatechumenal group offer lively ‘welcome back’ to Archbishop Wenski

ANA RODRIGUEZ-SOTO

MIAMI — Long before Archbishop Thomas Wenski used a gilded hammer to knock on the door of St. Mary Cathedral, a lively group of Catholics were beating conga drums, strumming guitars and dancing in his honor.

The impromptu serenade by more than 50 members of the Camino Neocatecumenal (Neocatechumenal Way) contrasted with the scripted formality of his installation ceremony, which began with a knock on the closed door of the cathedral.

Waiting inside were Miami’s three auxiliary bishops — Bishop Felipe Estevez, Bishop John Noonan and retired Bishop Agustin Roman. It was Bishop Roman who handed Archbishop Wenski a crucifix once the cathedral doors opened.

Afterward, the archbishop sprinkled holy water on those present in the vestibule of the church. Then, accompanied by his predecessor, Archbishop John C. Favalora, and Archbishop Pietro Sambi, the papal nuncio to the U.S., Archbishop Wenski made his way to the cathedral’s Blessed Sacrament Chapel, where the three knelt for a moment in prayer.

When they moved to the altar, the ceremony of installation took place. Archbishop Sambi delivered a brief message, then read the papal bull, or letter, announcing Archbishop Wenski’s appointment as Miami’s fourth archbishop and thanking Archbishop Favalora for his nearly 16 years of service here.

Msgr. Michael Soucek, archdiocesan chancellor, held up the papal bull for all to see, and Archbishop Sambi and Archbishop Favalora escorted Archbishop Wenski onto the cathedral or bishop’s chair at the back of the cathedral. They then handed him the crosier, or bishop’s staff, another symbol of his office as shepherd of the Catholic flock in south Florida.

After the Mass, Archbishop Wenski spent a full hour personally greeting each of the hundreds who obtained a seat at the installation — among them nearly 400 priests, plus deacons, members of religious communities and two representatives from each parish of the archdiocese.

But before doing so, he briefly stepped outside to greet and bless the more than 100 well-wishers who had braved the rain and heat to welcome him — all the while strumming guitars, banging on bongos and singing Spanish-language hymns.

They also unfurled a huge banner inscribed with his episcopal motto — “I have become all things to all men in order to save at least some” — and, in even bigger letters, “Welcome home.”

“This is a demonstration that the Church is alive,” said Aidar Gonzalez, a member of the Camino Neocatecumenal from Mother of Christ Parish in Miami.

The movement’s goal is to rekindle in today’s Catholics the early Christians’ enthusiasm for the faith by means of the proclamation of the word and instruction in the faith.

“We know him because in Orlando he presided over a beautiful Eucharist for us,” said Gonzalez. “We want him to know he can count on our support.”

Haitian bishop: ‘It was an honor’

MIAMI — Bishop Joseph Lafontant, apostolic administrator for earthquake-ravaged Port-au-Prince, Haiti, led a delegation of Haitian bishops to the installation of Archbishop Thomas Wenski, bringing a relationship to full circle.

“It was really an honor to be invited because I had the privilege of laying hands on him the day he was ordained a bishop. I was already a bishop for 10 years when Archbishop (John C.) Favalora ordained him,” Bishop Lafontant told the Florida Catholic the morning following the Mass.

“It was a great ceremony. The part I loved the most was that everybody considered Archbishop Wenski as a child who was away and has come home (to Miami). That means they accept him and he considered himself also at home,” the bishop added. So now he can start working with them.”

Bishop Lafontant said that due to Archbishop Wenski’s knowledge of the Creole language and the work he did at Notre Dame d’Haiti Parish in Miami, he has become a specialist in Creole, in proverbs and even telling jokes in Creole.

“When he preaches that goes through to the people immediately because he knows what people can comprehend,” Bishop Lafontant said.

Asked if the new Miami archbishop would be a blessing for Haiti’s earthquake recovery efforts, Bishop Lafontant pointed out that Archbishop Wenski has already published some 40,000 simple daily prayer booklets in Creole for distribution in the earthquake refugee tent cities and camps. He is shipping them to Haiti so the priests can take them to all the camps, Bishop Lafontant said.

“We need a kind of new pastoral because people are not gathering mostly in the churches; they are gathering in the camps. The Protestant ministers go to the camps so we should go to the camps also. I have also given the priests battery-operated public address units made possible by a benefactor for preaching in the camps.”
